Introduction

The use of hypnosis for healing purposes can be traced back thousands of years. More than 4,000 years ago, ancient Egyptians attended the temple of Imhotep, where they would engage in healing rituals involving a trance-like state.

German physician Franz Mesmer (1734-1815) suggested that humans are affected by 'magnetic tides' in a similar way to the forces which affects planets. Mesmer used magnets with Francisca Österlin, a patient suffering from hysteria. He claimed that his newfound techniques had helped the patient. However, it is believed that it was in fact Mesmer's use of hypnotic suggestions which had brought about changes in his patient. Today, the term mesmerism is synonymous with hypnosis.

In 1845, surgeon James Esdaile travelled to India and gained respect for his successful use of hypnosis. He reduced mortality rates in surgery from around 50 percent to just 8 percent, and his patients recovered more quickly and easily than the average surgical cases of his day. By 1847, James Braid discovered that all the major phenomena of hypnotism, such as catalepsy, anaesthesia and amnesia, could be induced without sleep. Realising that his choice of the term hypnosis had been a mistake, he tried to rename it monoideism, but it was too late: hypnosis and hypnotism had already gained widespread use.

Today, hypnotherapy is used in many diverse areas including conventional medicine, counselling, dentistry, psychology, sports psychology, personal development and in business.

The potential for clinical hypnotherapy and its uses are almost unlimited, and the tools you will learn will give you the knowledge to treat, help or relieve many somatic and psychological symptoms including, but not limited to:

What is hypnotherapy?

Hypnosis is a state of altered awareness during which our subconscious mind is more open and receptive to suggestions that are given. We drift in and out of different levels of awareness many times each day, absorbing information on a subliminal level as well as a conscious one.

A hypnotherapist will work with a client's imagination to help them to achieve their goals, such as overcoming habits and phobias, or losing weight.

The Practitioner Diploma in Hypnotherapy course provides every student with comprehensive knowledge and professional practical training. You will meet all kinds of people from all walks of life and no two cases will be exactly the same.

Can anyone be hypnotised?

All hypnosis is in essence, self-hypnosis, and few people are incapable of being hypnotised. Therefore, most people can benefit in some way from hypnosis provided they are guided by an experienced individual who understands the way in which the subconscious mind functions.

A thorough understanding of the developing mind and therapeutic approaches is essential for hypnotherapists, as dealing with personal problems is an great responsibility.

Popular portrayals of hypnosis, as well as stage hypnosis as a form of entertainment, may lead you to imagine swinging watches, spinning spirals and onstage antics when you think of 'hypnosis'. But the therapeutic application of hypnosis - hypnotherapy - is considerably different from these preconceptions.

Clinical hypnotherapy training is also located within different 'schools of thought'. Some are humanistic, some psychodynamic, some cognitive, and so on. We encourage an 'eclectic' or 'integrative' style of thinking. This means taking what is best about all the different approaches and applying whatever is best for each individual client.

It isn't necessary to have experienced clinical hypnotherapy before training to be a clinical hypnotherapist. You will experience trance on the first weekend! You need absolutely no prior knowledge in how to induce trance or practice as a therapist, we teach you everything!

Setting up in practice

Thinking ahead to the end of the course, you will have all you need to set up as a professional clinical hypnotherapist. This is an exciting time and you could go fulltime or part-time.

It is important though consider the business side of things, which is why we teach you everything you need to do in order to set up and market your new practice.

Unlike many other businesses which rely on long-term, repeat clients, as hypnotherapists we tend to see clients over a relatively short time period. High client turnover means a constant need to attract new clients into our business. Fortunately, there is a growing market for clinical hypnotherapy services. Your practice will be as busy as you make it.
